Dear Gloria:

This is a very difficult letter to write, but write it I must. Since I last saw you, things have changed. You see, on my last business trip, I met someone else. You must believe me, this was not something I was looking for, but it found me nonetheless. I'm very sorry and I know this will hurt you terribly... but I have fallen in love. Perhaps this will be for the best. After all, you have complained to me on several occasions that we hardly ever see each other and that you get lonely during our long separations. Honestly, I have always felt the same. Now you have a chance to meet some really nice guy there in Vancouver... I'm sure anyone could be around for you more than I ever was. I wish you all the happiness in the world, and hold out the hope that one day you will, if not forgive me, understand that this is what had to happen eventually. I will always remember you as the person who turned my life around, and the memory of our weekend in Squamish (and that cowgirl outfit you wore) will stay with me always. Once again, I am so very sorry that things had to end this way. You are a beautiful, intelligent and amazing woman, and I know that you will bounce back stronger and happier than before.

Love,

Garth Johnson

P.S. Could you send me a picture to remember you by? The ones I had fell off the boat.
