Dear Ms. Steele:

For the longest time I had no interest in books or reading, that is, until I found out about your writing.

I have always believed that the more popular the artist, the better their art. I follow this credo when buying records or seeing movies, and I have never been disappointed. It's funny how critics and "the underground" try to lure one away from popular things. It seems as though they all want you to listen to weird bands and go to black and white movies that have no stars in them. There's a reason why those things don't gain popular acceptance... they're not good enough. For instance, everybody likes the New York Yankees, and that's because they're the best. Consequently, when my girlfriend said that I should do some reading because I might enjoy it, I looked for the New York Yankees of authors, and I found you. I have now read three of your books, Daddy, Heartbeat and Wanderlust. All of them were best sellers, and for good reason. They are great books. So, I guess what I'm asking you, in a roundabout way is, which one of your books is the best (i.e. the biggest seller), because I would like to read that one next.

I know its not easy being number one, what with all those Jackie Collins' breathing down your neck. But that's what makes the best the best: competition.

Keep writing those bestsellers,

Garth Johnson

P.S. Could you please send me an autographed picture?
